überfallen, v. n. separ. (f.) to fall over.

Syn. überfallen, überfallen, überfallen. Überfallen (to surprise) is distinguished by the concomitant idea of swiftness, and the action may take place either in an agreeable or in a disagreeable manner; überfallen (to fall upon) by the accompanying idea of something disagreeable and of violence; überfallen (to take unawares) which has a very close affinity to überfallen in point of meaning, gives to it the accessory idea of noise and confusion. A person uses expedition in travelling to a friend, in order to arrive sooner than was expected and to increase his joy by the agreeable überfallen (surprise).

Syn. überführen, überreden, überweisen, überzeugen. We may überzeugen (convince) and überreden (persuade) even ourselves of any thing, but can only überweisen (prove guilty) and überführen (convict) another; we can, however, only überzeugen by substantial proofs, we can also überreden (talk over) by the semblance of proof. We also überzeugen any one of universal truisms and natural events, but we überweisen and überführen another only of facts and indeed only of such, which are free acts, and of which he is himself the author, whereas on the other hand we überzeugen and überreden others of the truth or incorrectness of any thing. Lastly, one person can also überzeugen and überreden some one else, that he has done something good, but one can überweisen and überführen another only of the wrong, that he has previously done, and in short, one überführt (confutes) him, when he has hitherto denied it.

um'zingeln, v. a. (insepar.) to encircle, surround on all sides; eine Festung —, to encompass or beleager a fortress; Diebe —, to close round robbers.

Syn. Umzingeln, umgeben, umringen. A person is umgeben (surrounded) by many others, even if the circle is not yet completely closed. When the king appears at the court, he is umgeben by the court-dignitaries, but not umringt (encircled), still less umzingelt; for they only stand behind him and on both sides. Moreover, umgeben is said also of a circle that consists of inanimate things. The sun and the moon are sometimes umgeben by a bright circle which is called a halo. But that which is umringt, is shut in on all sides and into a perfect circle. We therefore umringen something that it may have no egress, and no one an ingress to the same. Umzingeln is to close something in more narrowly, to obstruct the egress and to be able to attack it from a short distance. Umringen, therefore, may either have a friendly or a hostile object in view, but umzingeln (to environ, encompass) only a hostile one.

Syn. Unbefangen, Breit. Unbefangen is that person who in his judgment and actions is not bound or captivated by certain views or passions, i. e. who is free from prejudices. That person is Breit, who in his judgment and actions is free of constraint who is not checked by fear of others. Consequently unbefangen (unprejudiced, impartial) is never a fault. Breitigkeit (freedom, boldness) may be one, the more so as it approaches to pertness and impudence. In those cases where one's Unbefangenheit (coolness) arises from an absence of fear, it is still a lesser degree of freedom in judging and acting than Breitigkeit.

Un'behagen, n. (-s) dislike, displeasure, uncomfortableness.
un'behaglich, adj. unpleasant, uncomfortable, uneasy, comfortless.
Syn. Unbehaglich, unangenehm. In the first place unbehaglich points out generally the feeling of displeasure at our actual condition, unangenehm the feeling of disappointment at the failure of a hope or at the absence of some wished-for good. It is unangenehm (disagreeable) to us when a letter does not come which we have anxiously expected, but it is not unbehaglich. On the other hand, a cold room in the winter is very unbehaglich (uncomfortable). Unbehaglichkeit arises, moreover, from a vague feeling which we can as little analyse as its causes, but we are more clearly aware of what is unangenehm, as likewise of the causes.

un'beständig, adj. inconstant, changeable, unstable, unsteady, fickle, variable, mutable.

Syn. Unbeständig, veränderlich, wandelmütig. Veränderlich (mutable, changeable) is an epithet for a person or thing that often and easily changes, or for anything in general which can be changed. Fashion is veränderlich, a man is veränderlich, etc. The proportion between the sides of a triangle is called veränderlich and not unbeständig. The former, therefore, points more to the susceptibility of undergoing change and is not always a fault. Unbeständig implies more a defect of constancy in the state or relation once entered into, and is always a fault, e. g. ein unbeständiger (inconstant) man; unbeständiges (fickle) weather. Wandelmütig (irresolute) can naturally be only used of persons. A man is wandelmütig when he often changes his thoughts, his choice, his resolves before the execution of them takes place; he is unbeständig and veränderlich when he often changes his will or plans after having begun the execution of them. The Wandelmütigkeit does not direct his choice to any object with firmness. The Unbeständigkeit and Veränderlichkeit does not long remain constant to the choice he has already made; the former cannot make a beginning, the latter cannot persevere.

Syn. Ungehalten, böse, zornig, unwillig. The slightest degree of displeasure felt, entertained at some wrong which another does, is expressed by böse. He who is böse at something, allows it to be observed by his silence by staying or going away, by averting his face, etc. Ungehalten expresses higher degree. He who is ungehalten at the conduct of another, causes his displeasure to be known by movements of disapproval and restlessness. With a person who is zornig that displeasure attains the highest degree of intensity, occasioning the most violent agitation, etc. Unwillig is an affection of less power, not so conspicuous, often quite concealed. Any injustice that we suffer ourselves can put us into zorn. On the other hand, any wrong, even when others suffer it, whether it took place long ago or not,
 nay, every kind of wrong, as soon as it comes to our knowledge, can excite our un gern, adv. unwillingly, with reluctance, reluctantly, with displeasure, against the grain; ich sehe —, I am sorry to find.

Syn. Ungern, unwillig, unfreiwillig. When a man compels himself to do anything that is disagreeable to another, he does it ungern and unwillig; he simply does that unfreiwillig, to which he has been compelled by others. We often do something freiwillig (spontaneously, voluntarily) that we nevertheless do ungern (not readily) and unwillig (unwillingly). Unwillig is distinguished from ungern by this, that we do ungern what is excessively disagreeable to us, but unwillig, what we detest, and with such a degree of annoyance or repugnance as to betray it by our behaviour. When any one does anything ungern (not cheerfully), it is disagreeable to him, even if he does not allow it to be perceived; when he does anything unwillig (reluctantly, with repugnance), other persons can perceive it by his looks, gestures, and words.

Syn. un'geftüm, heftig, wüth. Heftig is something that generally acts with a great degree of power. It is un'geftüm (turbulent, impetuous) in so far as its violence becomes disagreeable and oppressive or is considered as injurious and dangerous. It is wüth (wild) in so far as it manifests itself by disorder and irregularity. A passion is heftig in so far as it has generally an unusual strength, un'geftüm (raging) in so far as it is oppressive and dangerous by its violence, and this can produce injury; it is wüth, in so far as it masters the reason and bursts through all barriers of rule, of order and of law.

Syn. lin'gewiß, zweifelhaft, unentschieden, verlegen. We are un'gewiß (uncertain) when we do not know whether something ought to be desired and whether it is good or essentially necessary to desire that something. We are zweifelhaft (doubtful, dubious) when we do not know which of two things we ought to desire, seeing that we have reasons equally cogent and potent for either side. Unentschieden (irresolution) is the difficulty itself of deciding upon something, as long as we are still undecided for want of a preponderance of reasons, and thus becomes Verlegenheit (embarrassment), when we positively must decide upon something, and yet cannot make up our minds to adopt one thing or the other. Un'gewißheit (uncertainty) makes us indifferent, zweifelhaftigkeit (doubt), uneasy, unentschiedenheit, inactive, Verlegenheit, distressed, anxious, and fearful. In its highest degree Verlegenheit becomes a dilemma causing great mental distress.

Syn. lin'gewiß, zweifelhaft (as applied to things). A proposition, whether in itself considered to be true or false, is un'gewiß so long as the mind does not fully comprehend all the reasons that tend to demonstrate its truth, or as long as there are not yet sufficient reasons for regarding it as false. It is zweifelhaft (doubtful) when the reasons for and against it are equally balanced.

verber'gen, v. ir. I. a. to hide, conceal, keep from; II. refl. to hide one's self, to abscond.

Syn. Verbergen, verhehlen, verhehlen, verheimlichen, verheimlichen. In the first place, a person verbergt (hides), for the sake of security, but the expression has been generalized so that that is said to be verbergen which is not known. We say that the ways of Providence are verbergen (hidden) from the human understanding. That is verhehlen, which is not intended to be seen: thus a person verhehlt (hides, secretes, conceals) something under his cloak or himself behind a door, etc. A person verheimlicht something by preventing it from becoming known to those who have an interest in gaining a knowledge of it. A person verheimlicht, dissembles the truth, when he does not wish another to know it. A person, however, verheimlicht (passes over in silence, suppresses) that which he does not himself make known either by speech or writing. A Roman Catholic priest must verheimlichen what he hears in the confessional. A person verheimlicht (conceals, keeps secret) that which it is his bounden duty to reveal.

T's, ein tief verbundenes Schiff, a deep-waisted ship; ein niedrig verbundenes Schiff, a low built vessel; ein tief verbundenes Zwischendeck, a ship which is very high between decks.

Syn. Verbinden, verpflichten; Verbindlichkeit, Pflicht. In English "bound" is a stronger expression than "obliged," in German verpflichtet is stronger than verbunden, and it is so used in the courts of law in both countries. A person having entered upon a new office, is verpflichtet (bound) by an oath to discharge its duties with truth and loyalty, to do which he was already verbunden (morally obliged) by his acceptance of the office. Verbindlichkeit is the moral necessity (obligation), Pflicht is the act which it is incumbent on a person bound by it to perform. One says, therefore, to act in accordance with one's Verbindlichkeit, i. e. to fulfill one's moral obligations and to do one's Pflicht (duty).

verdel'h'en, v. a. to extend or stretch too much, to spoil by drawing out; seine Zeit —, to waste one's time in indolence.

verden'en, v. ir. a. (einem etwas) to blame for.

Syn. Verdenen, verargen, verübeln. When a person thinks it wrong, injudicious, or foolish on the part of another, he uses verbenen, and indeed because he considers that the other is principally injuring himself by what he is doing.

But when that other person injures others by what he is doing, then the former thinks it wrong or wicked in him to do so; this he expresses by verargen. A person verden't it on the part of the buyer, when he gives more for an article than it is worth, and on the part of the seller when he sells that article at a loss or under its fair market-value; both do not act rightly, but they only injure themselves. A person verarg't a man otherwise estimable, if he lends money to a young spendthrift.

For, by doing so, he injures another. When a person takes anything ill or amiss, i. e. when he thinks that another has acted wrong towards him, he then uses verübeln.

Verdre'sch, m. + vid. Verdruß.

verdre'sen, v. ir. imp. to grieve, fret, vex, chagrin; to trouble; es verdre'st mich, it grieves, vexes, irks me; sich — lassen, to be grieved, vexed, to take offence at; sich keine Mühe, keine Kosten — lassen, to grudge no pains, no expenses; ich verdre'st die Arbeit nie, he never dislikes labour; vid. Syn. baurn.

verdre'slich, adj. I. fretful, crabbed, morose, peevish, sullen, out of humour; 2. troublesome, irksome, vexatious, disagreeable; einen — machen, to fret one; ein —er Vorfall, a vexatious event.

Syn. Verdre'slich, ärgerlich, grämlich, launisch, mürrisch. Verdre'slich and ärgerlich are distinguished from the rest by this, that the motives or reasons of the former are objective, whilst those of the latter are subjective. It is usual, therefore, to assign the cause or motive why a person is verdre'st and ärgerlich. An impatient person soon becomes verdre'st, if he is kept waiting too long, and a passionate person soon becomes ärgerlich, particularly if he thinks that it has been done on purpose. More-over those persons are said to be ärgerlich who are easily vexed about trifles; invalids, for instance, are generally ärgerlich. He that complains and laments is grämlich; he that is mürrisch is constantly finding fault; he that is launisch is inconstant, at times pleased, at other times displeased, without having any just cause for either: sometimes he is grämlich and mürrisch, sometimes cheerful and contented. Children can easily be grämlich, but not mürrisch, for they can complain, but not find fault. Spoiled children, and women too delicately nurtured are launisch. Hence it appears that verdre'slich means sore, ärgerlich, indignant, touchy, testy, and also cross, peevish; grämlich is whining, fretful; launisch, capricious, fickle; and mürrisch, grumbling, scolding, snappish.

Verdre'slichkeit, f. (pl. -en) 1. fretfulness, moroseness, peevishness, ill humour; 2. irksomeness, troublesome-ness, vexatious matter.

Verdro's'en, adj. 1. loath, unwilling, disinclined, averse; 2. lazy, slow, dull.

Verdro'senheit, f. 1. loathing, unwillingness, reluctance; repugnance; 2. laziness, slowness, indolence, dullness.

verdrud'en, v. a. I. to misprint; 2. to consume in printing; 3. to spend in printing.

verdrü'd'en, v. a. I. to press out of place; 2. to press out of shape; 3. fig. improp. vid. unterdrücken.

Verdrü's, m. (-ßes) 1. ill-will, indignation, anger, spite, pet; 2. vexation, trouble, chagrin; — machen, to vex, chagrin, spite; etwas zu ein'ß — ste t(h)un, to do something to vex one; allen Men'schen zum — ste, to the vexation, in spite of everybody; ein-nen — haben, fam. to be hunch-backed.

Syn. Verdrü's, Ärger. Verdrü's (originally the same as Plage) is merely the soreness or displeasure itself which that causes us which any one does; Ärger is an anger, an irritation, which works more upon the feeling itself than upon external objects. Verdrü's depresses, Ärger excites the mind. When the injustice committed by others affects us nearly it makes us sad; when we regard it as deserving of punishment we Ärger uns at it. Verdrü's affects the mind, Ärger the gall. Hence it appears that Verdrü's is vexation, Ärger annoyance, irritation. vid. also Mißverg'nügen.

Syn. Verführen, verleiten, betrügen. One verführt the will and betetlet the understanding. When one wishes to verführen a man, one endeavours to work upon his will and to deceive by exciting certain desires; when one wishes to verleiten another to a thing, he endeavours to work upon his understanding, and to deceive it by specious arguments. He that is verführt acts therefore without reflection, the verleitete person reflects, but his judgment has been blinded or warped. A person verführt unprotected innocence, verleitet short-sighted simplicity; verführen, therefore, is to seduce, and verleiten to mislead, to misguide. He who raises a hope which he does not realize, and consequently deceives an expectation founded in full confidence in his word, betriegt (deceives). The Verführer (seducer) must often betrügen; he must raise hopes which he does not intend to fulfill or cannot, in order to lead astray (verführen).

Syn. Verbalten, Aufführung, Betragen, Benehmen. The Aufführung of a young man is ascertained by many of his actions. They say, for instance, the Aufführung of a young man is good or bad. Verbalten is the agreement between our active and passive conduct, and the duties which we have to do under certain circumstances. In Betragen we consider acts in so far as they are merits or defects of the understanding and of the heart. Soldiers have sich verbalten (conducted themselves) well, inasmuch as they have performed their duty, and have sich betragen (behaved) well, in so far as that which they have done is a proof of their valour, the chief virtue with persons of their profession. In the one instance they have sich verbalten (kept themselves) strict to their duty, in the other they have sich betragen (borne or carried themselves) courageously and coolly. Benehmen is the result and sign of prudence, skill, address, pliancy, presence of mind, or else of the absence of these qualities. This, therefore, is "behaviour" and Aufführung "conduct."

verfaufen, v. a. to sell, vend, dispose of; mit Schaden —, to undersell.

Syn. Verfaufen, verbaneln, absetzen, betreiben. The parting with any article for a certain price is denoted by verfaufen and verbaneln. Verbaneln differs, however, from verfaufen in this, that it alludes to or implies a longer or shorter negotiation, in which an agreement is entered into concerning the final conditions of the contract. The act of offering on both sides is called baneln. Such a baneln may last some time, when both parties are very intent upon increasing their own advantage, and hence verbaneln frequently expresses betraufen together with the accessory idea of self-advantage, and is, therefore, used in a contemptuous sense. Absetzen is selling the goods in so far as the stock of goods is lessened by their sale; this can take place by supplying a large order from one single person; when any one disposes of a great number of them to several buyers and especially living remote from each other, then one says he betreibt them, or he carries on a large Vertrieb in this article. Hence verfaufen is "to sell," verbaneln "to bargain," absetzen "to dispose of," and betreiben means "to carry on business, to do business."

verleichen, v. a. to backbite, calumniate, slander, traduce, defame.

Syn. Verleichen, verunglimpfen, lästern, answärzen, spitterrichten. He who verleucht a person to others, relates to them false or unsubstantiated facts to the detriment of that person's character. He who verunglimpft him, judges his qualities or actions harshly, illiberally, odiously. The highest degree of verunglimpfen is lästern, for one lästert that person on whose perfectly moral and honourable actions and in whose genuine good qualities one passes a judgment degrading in the highest degree. According to this definition, therefore, verleuchen is "to backbite or to scandalize," for scandal is either false or not proved; verunglimpfen is "to cry down, to detract from, to asperse," and lästern is "to calumniate, to slander, to vilify." Now, verleuchen and verunglimpfen together constitute answärzen, in so far as the person so verleucht and verunglimpft stood in good repute previously, and in so far as the motive for such scandal was the exciting of suspicion and distrust against him. This is therefore "to blacken, to libel, to traduce." Spitterrichten is to judge trivial, nay, the most trifling faults with too much severity. It has generally for its object that of convincing others of one's own immaculate conduct and of inducing others to form a high opinion of the strictness of one's own principles. This is "to carp or cavil at," or, more familiarly but more correctly, "to pick flaws, to run down."

vermö'gend, adj. 1. powerful, strong; 2. able; 3. rich, opulent, wealthy.

Syn. Vermögend, bemittelt, wohlhabend, begütert, reich. The two first denote a man who possesses sufficient property or means to procure himself some degree of comfort. Wohlhabend expresses a greater amount of property or means. A man is wohlhabend when he has a competency and when his income enables him to procure all the comforts which his station in life and his habits can rationally require. Begütert is stronger still than wohlhabend, and is principally said of those whose property either entirely or partly is vested in land or tenements. Reich, the highest term, and expresses a great superabundance of all temporal possessions. Vermögend is therefore "substantial," bemittelt "of some means, of means," wohlhabend "well off, independent, or well to do," begütert "of real property," and reich "rich or wealthy."

Syn. I. Vernehmen, verstehen. We hear (hören) a sound, when it generally makes an impression on our organs of hearing, but we only vernehmen it when we distinguish it; hence vernehmen in this sense is "to hear distinctly."

Syn. II. Vernehmen, verstehen. In order to understand a speech fully, it is necessary, first, that we properly distinguish the syllables and words of which it is composed, and, secondly, that we sufficiently recognize the sense of the speech by means of those words and their context. But to do this, it is further requisite that we be sufficiently acquainted with the language employed by the speaker and with the subject he discourses upon. Hence it is evident that, however distinctly a person may vernehmen (hear) or catch the words the speaker utters, he will be totally unable to verstehen (understand) him without previously having a knowledge of the language used, or, if in his own language, of the things forming the topic of that discourse.

verfichern, v. I. a. 1. to assure, protect, to ascertain; 2. to insure, assure; einem eine Sache —, to make one sure of a thing; ich versichere Sie or Ihnen, I assure you; ein Schiff und dessen Ladung —, to insure a ship and cargo; II. refl. 1. to make one's self sure of a thing; 2. to obtain certain information; 3. to take possession of; sich einer or von einer Sache —, to assure or make one's self sure of; sich einer Person or Sache —, to secure, arrest one or a thing, to make sure of him or it.

Syn. Verichern, Sicherheit geben, Sicherheit stellen. Verichern takes place even by mere words, whether the danger which some one apprehends is a pure error (in other respects a harmless one), or whether it be a loss of one's property. Now an insurance office verichert (insures) ships, buildings, estates, etc., verichert (insures) lives. Sicherheit geben and stellen take place by removing the apprehension that some one will not act up to his obligations, and either can take place by several modes of proceeding. Sicherheit stellen, by the more formal word stellen, is distinguished from Sicherheit geben, inasmuch as it takes place before legal authorities. This is, therefore, "to give or find bail"; the other is "to give security."

verfieget, v. n. (f.) to dry up, become dry, to sink gradually into the ground, be drained, be exhausted; (to decay).

Syn. Verlegen, betrocknen, verdorren. Verdorren is not only used when speaking of water, but of any moisture, and even of things which lose their moisture; it is "to dry up." Verdorren is only said of things which, together with the moisture, lose the nourishing juices, without which their life cannot be supported, and this is "to wither up." Verlegen merely denotes the diminution of the depth and the total disappearance of the moisture in any reservoir. A source, a stream verfieget (dries up, fails, becomes empty).

verfiegt, adj. dry, drained, emptied; meine Süßquellen find verfiegt, my resources are exhausted.

verfinken, v. ir. n. (f.) to sink; in den Abgrund verfunken, swallowed up in the abyss; fig. verfunken sein in . . ., to be sunk or absorbed in . . .

Syn. Verfunken, vertiefen (sich); —verfunken, vertieft. A man is verfunken when his feelings, his powers of summoning up the past or of anticipating the future are for the time obscured or diminished by too great an exertion of the mind; verfunken, when they are so by strong depressing passion. As a man is verfunken in pain, so is he vertieft in reflections or investigations. Vertieft is therefore "sunk," also "depressed," the other is "lost" or "absorbed."

verfink fen, v. a. 1. to reconcile; conciliate; 2. to expiate, atone; 3. to appease; to propitiate; sich mit einem —, to reconcile one's self, be reconciled with one.

Syn. Verfühnen, ausfühnen, sich wieder vertragen. Sich wieder vertragen with a person merely means to restore unanimity between that person and one's self. Verfühnen and ausfühnen, to forgive the injuries occasioned by him, and to wish to live no longer in enmity with him. Sich vertragen, therefore, only puts away disunion, and hence it is said of all persons who live in harmony, that they vertragen sich (agree well, are friendly together); those persons, therefore, vertragen sich (agree together again), who were merely separated by differences of opinion. They who sich verfühnen (become reconciled to each other), had lived in hostility, hated each other and mutually endeavoured to be revenged. The persons who had lived in friendship with each other must be ausgeführt (made friends again, must make it up again).

Syn. I. Verſteilen, verſteilt, entſteilen. Verſteilen merely denotes that a man by an alteration of his figure has become difficult to be recognized, without deciding whether he has become uglier in consequence of his alteration. Verſteilt denotes that his figure has lost some of its beauty and perfection. Entſteilen expresses both these ideas together; he who is entſteilt, is uglier and less perfect as to his form, and in consequence of this impairment has become so changed as not to be recognized. Every kind of mutilation verſteiltet (impairs) a man; but it does not follow that it verſteilt (disguises), and entſteilt (disfigures) him.

Syn. II. Verſteilen (ſich), ſteilen (ſich). Sich verſteilen is not to follow one's real opinions to be known; ſich ſteilen is to endeavor to palm off on another as one's opinions those which are not so in reality; the first is, therefore, "to dissemble," the second "to feign, to simulate."

Syn. Vertrauen, trauen, verlaſſen (ſich). These words signify the expectations we form of the power and will of another.

We trauen (trust) him, when we simply apprehend no evil at his hands, we vertrauen (confide in) him, when we expect good at his hands. As we can only expect good from God, and since it is utterly impossible that He can wish anything evil, it would be too feeble an expression to say we trauen (trust) him; we must vertrauen (confide in) him.

Vertrauen, n. (—s) confidence, trust; ſein — auf einen ſetzen, to put one's trust in a person; — auf Gott, trust in God; etwas im — ſagen, to tell something in confidence; compos.

Syn. Vorrede, Vorbericht. It is expected that a Vorbericht (advice to the reader) should be short, and that a Vorrede (preface) should be longer. In the Vorbericht, therefore, only certain circumstances are commonly mentioned which may be useful for the reader to know. In a Vorrede not only is this done more diffusely, but even the object and utility of the book, the manner in which the reader ought to use it, the importance of the subject-matter, etc., are mentioned. In English an introduction is usually somewhat longer than a preface; Vorbericht (preamble) may therefore be rendered by preface and Vorrede by introduction.

Waffe, f. (pl. —n) 1. weapon, arms, instrument of attack or defence; 2. claw, talon of an animal; vid. Waff-fest; 3. T. tools, instruments.

Syn. Waff'en, Gewehr, Rüstung, Geschütz, Stiel, Geißel. Waff'en, Gewehr und Rüstung are first of all such instruments of war as the warrior carries at or on his body; Geschütz (artillery, ordnance) such as follow the army and are drawn by animals, as cannon. The word Waff'en (weapons) denotes in its most extended sense everything that can be used for attack, for defence or protection; hence even such limbs of animals as serve for attack or defence are called Waff'en, as horns, teeth, claws, etc. In the more limited sense we understand by Waff'en (arms) the artificial portable instruments which the warrior uses as well for attack as defence. Under the word Rüstung we understand all the usual artificial Waff'en of the warrior as well for attack as for protection; his accoutrements or equipment, or else his mail, helmet, harness, armlets and greaves or, in a word, his "armour." Gewehr comprise only instruments of attack and not weapons of defence; they are "arms of offence." The word Stiel is used for single cannons (= "piece"); thus we have drei, sechs, zwölfpündige Stiele, three-pounders, six-pounders, twelve-pounders. The word Geißel is now obsolete as a military term, though still used by poets; it corresponds to the English "bolt" or "shaft."

war'nen, v. a. to warn, caution, admonish; einen vor einer Sache —, to warn one of a thing, to caution one against; —d, adj. admonitory, cautionary.

Syn. Warnen (etnen), abrat'en (etnem). Warnen (the act of warning) may take place through the medium of any sign, abrat'en (the act of dissuading) only through that of words. Passers-by are put on their guard by certain Warnungszeichen, or signs of warning, when a roof is being fresh-tiled in a street. A person warn't (warns) another only of a danger or misfortune, he rät(h) ihm ab, (dissuades) him from something, when he represents to him generally the reasons why he ought not to do something.

Syn. Warten, abwarten, erwarten. The main idea conveyed by warten (to wait) is that of remaining in the same situation (in one place or position) without requiring any secondary idea to complete its full meaning. I have gewartet (waited) here more than an hour, merely says: I can no longer remain inactive, I must resolve upon something. Abwarten (await) adds to the idea of warten the preponderating secondary idea of continuing or persevering until the desired result is obtained, which puts an end to the warten. Finally, erwarten (to expect) is distinguished from both by the prominent accessory idea of something about to happen. According to the nature of this something is the erwarten either agreeable or disagreeable; vid. also barren.

Syn. Wert (h), Preis, Gehalt. The judgment arrived at concerning the goodness of things is their Wert (h) (worth). The Preis (price) is that which is considered equal to the Wert (h) of anything, especially in money. The Preis of things can rise or fall, without their innerer Wert (h) (real value) being increased or lessened. The Gehalt is the real value of the nobler metals and of the coins struck from them. Gold and silver, for instance, are alloyed with base metal; the less, therefore, they contain of alloy, by so much the higher, and the more they contain of it, by so much the lower is their Gehalt (that is, standard).

Syn. Wetter, Witterung. Witterung denotes those changeable circumstances, which commonly change according to the difference of climates and seasons, the Wetter those which change under the same climate and during the same season of the year. Witterung signifies the nature of the atmosphere during a longer period of time, Wetter during a shorter. The Germans say: it is beautiful Wetter (weather) when the sun shines and it is not rainy or windy; on the other hand, the Witterung (climate or weather) is by so much the more severe in a country the farther it lies to the north. They say, moreover, to-day is beautiful Wetter (weather), but this spring, this summer, etc., we have beautiful Witterung. In English "weather" has both significations, and "climate" or "season" can seldom be substituted for it in translating Witterung.

Syn. Zinsen, Renten, Einkünfte. Zinsen und Renten consist only of that which is given for the use of a piece of ground or of capital. Einkünfte, on the other hand, comprehends all kinds of useful things, which come in, as it were, yearly. The merchant reckons up the profits of his trade, the artist the payments for the productions of his art, the person on pay counts in his pay as part of his Einkünfte, as well as doing so with his Renten und Zinsen. In general Renten are distinguished from the Einkünfte from a salary or from the profit of a trade, but they include the Zinsen of one's capital (compare Renten, Zinsen, Zinsen). Zinsen und Renten are distinguished thus, that Zinsen (interest) signifies that sum which the giver is obliged to pay and which the capitalist or proprietor has a right of demanding; eine Rente (rent) in as much as the proprietor or capitalist receives it and by that means increases his Einkünfte (income). Hence it will be seen that Zinsen und Renten, especially the former, do not exactly mean the same thing that "interest" and "rent" mean in English.

zu(h)tragen, v. ir. I. a. to carry to, bring; fig. vulg. to report; II. refl. to happen, fall out, come to pass, to chance.

Syn. Zutragen (rich), geschehen, ereignen (rich), begeben (rich), vorgehen, vorfallen. Geschehen (to happen, take place) is said of all events or changes; it is the result of doing. If any one does anything, it geschieht (takes place); e. g. "Light the candle!" — "It is already geschehen (done)." The same is expressed by begeben (to come to pass), but with the added idea, that what begehrt excites special attention and interest. Precisely this extent of meaning is possessed also by vorfallen (to fall out or upon), but with the secondary idea, that that which vorfällt (happens), occurs unexpectedly. A change that excites particular attention, alters the state of things, and with which a longer succession of changes founded on it, and consequent upon each other, begins, begehrt sich (happens, betides); it is a Begebenheit (event, incident). When one considers an event with respect to its changes, whether it is regarded as an effect of physical necessity or as a mere effect of chance, then one says, it has sich zutragen (has been brought about). It sometimes chances, happens, turns out (trägt sich zu), that continued rainy weather spoils the harvest. Ereignen (to befall) is used in speaking of certain important circumstances, in as far as they have their peculiar consequences. At the entry of the king, it ereignete sich (occurred, happened) that a scaffolding broke, by which many persons lost their lives.

TABLE OF CLASSIFICATION OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS.

REMARK.—From this table must be excepted the sixteen irregular verbs which in our list form the eighth class.*

Name of the Class.	Imperfect.	Infinitive.	Past Participle.	Infinitive.	Imperfect.	Past Participle.
I.	e	a	e	Sehen, to see,	sah,	gesehen.
II.	e	a	o	Helfen, to help,	half,	geholfen.
	i			Sinnen, to reflect,	sann,	gesonnen.
III.	i	a	u	Trinken, to drink,	trank,	getrunken.
IV.	a	ie	a	Fallen, to fall,	fiel,	gefallen.
V.	ei	ie	ie	Schreiben, to write,	schrrieb,	geschrieben.
		i	i	Beißen, to bite,	biß,	gebissen.
VI.	ä, au,	o	o	Schießen, to shoot,	schuß,	geschossen.
	e, i, ie, ö, ü.
VII.	a	u	a	Schlagen, to beat,	schlug,	geschlagen.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

I. The first class changes the radical vowel e into a in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex., Geben, to give; imperfect gab; past part. gegeben. To this class must be added: bitten, to entreat (beg), which changes the radical vowel i in the same manner, as: imperfect bat; past part. gebeten.

II. The second class changes the radical vowel e or i into a in the imperfect, and in the past participle into o. Ex., nehmen, to take; imperf. nahm; past part. genommen; gewinnen, to win; imperf. gewann; past part. gewonnen. To these must be added gebären, produce (to give birth to), which has ä instead of i in the root, as: imperf. gebar; past part. geboren.

III. The third class changes the radical vowel i into a in the imperfect, and in the past part. into u. Ex., s(h)ingen, to sling; imperf. s(h)ang; past part. ges(h)ungen; except bingen to hire; imperf. dung; past part. gebungen; s(h)inden to slay; imperf. s(h)und; past part. ges(h)unden; and thun, to do; imperf. that; past part. gethan.

IV. The fourth class changes the radical vowel a into ie in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex., halten to hold; imperf. hielt; past part. gehaltten; except fangen, to catch; imperf. fing; past part. gefangen. The following conform to the principle of the rule, resuming in the past part. the radical vowel or diphthong of the present: laufen, to run; imperf. lief; past part. gelaufen; gehen to go; imperf. ging; past part. gegangen; heißen, to order; imperf. heiß; past part. geheissen; rufen, to call; imperf. rief; past part. gerufen; stoßen, to push; imperf. stieß; past part. gestoßen.

V. The fifth class changes the radical vowel ei into ie in the imperf. and in the past part. or before a consonant into i. Ex., bleiben, to remain; imperf. blieb; past part. geblieben; s(h)neiden, to cut; imperf. double schnitt; past part. geschnitten.

VI. The sixth class changes the radical vowels ä, au, e, i, ie, ö, ü, into o in the imperf. and past participle. Ex., s(h)wören, to swear; imperf. s(h)wor; past part. geschworen; saugen, to suck; imperf. sog; past part. gesogen; saufen to drink to excess; imperf. soff; past part. geloffen; heben to lift; imperf. hob; past part. gehoben; verwirren, to embroil (to confuse); imperf. verwirr; past part. verworren; bieten, to offer; imperf. bot; past part. geboten; s(h)wören, to swear; imperf. s(h)wor (s(h)wur); past part. geschworen; lügen, to lie; imperf. log; past part. gelogen.

VII. The seventh class changes the radical vowel a into u in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex., wachsen, to grow; imperf. wuchs; past part. gewachsen; stehen, to stand, has stand in the imperfect (formerly, however, stund), and in the past part. gestanden.

* The fifth and sixth classes include the greater part of the irregular verbs.

LIST OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS BELONGING TO EACH OF THE BEFORE-MENTIONED CLASSES SEVERALLY.

The asterisk (*) marks the verbs which are also conjugated regularly when they have an active or transitive sense. The persons and tenses not indicated here are regular or are formed from the persons and tenses given. Derivative and compound verbs are conjugated like their primitives.

¹⁸ Wiegen, to rock (the cradle), is an active and regular verb.

¹⁹ All the derivatives from fahren are irregular, except mitfahren, to condescend, which is regular. Fahren in the signification of to lead, transport, takes haben as its auxiliary; in the signification, to go in a carriage, it takes sein. Ex. Der Kutscher hat mich gefahren, the coachman drove me; wir sind auf das Land gefahren, we went into the country in a carriage.

²⁰ Mahlen, to paint, without the h is regular.

²¹ Schaffen, in the signification: to procure, to provide, is regular.

²² The verbs rat(h)schlagen, berat(h)schlagen, to consult, deliberate, are regular.

† Those which have in the past participle t, and in the imperfect of both modes te, like the regular verbs, but which change the radical syllable, except in sollen and wollen, which are regular in the past participle and in the imperfect of both modes.

REMARK.—It must not be forgotten that the derivative and compound verbs with inseparable or separable particles must be sought for under their primitives. Ex.: Entwerfen, to project, and Vorwerfen, to reproach, under werfen, to throw; ausgehen, to go out, under gehen, to go; vorschreiben, to prescribe, under schreiben, to write, etc.
